08-19 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Every evening, many Chinese middle school students sit at their desks for hours doing homework. Some students do not finish until 10 or 11 o'clock at night. Parents and teachers often argue about whether students have too much homework. Is all this homework really necessary?

② Those who support a heavy homework load have their reasons. First, practice makes perfect. The more students practice, the more skilled they become. Math problems, English grammar exercises, and Chinese writing all improve with repetition (重复). Second, homework helps students review what they learned in class. Without it, they may quickly forget the knowledge. Third, doing homework teaches students self-discipline (自律). It helps them learn to manage time and complete tasks on their own.

注释： repetition 重复；self-discipline 自律；anxious 焦虑的；quantity 数量；burden 负担
