08-29 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Should parents limit (限制) how much time their children spend on the Internet? This question is being discussed in many families today. Some say yes, because too much screen time is bad for children's health and study. Others say no, because the Internet can be a useful tool for learning and communication.

③ However, those who disagree also have good points. They say the Internet is necessary for modern study. Students need to search for information, watch educational videos, and communicate with teachers and classmates online. Besides, learning to use the Internet wisely is an important skill for the future. If parents control everything, children may not learn to manage their own time. Some teenagers also feel that strict limits show a lack of trust.

④ So what can parents do? Experts suggest finding a balance. Parents can set clear rules, such as "no phones at dinner" or "only one hour of screen time on school nights." But they should also talk with their children about why these rules exist. When children understand the reasons, they are more likely to follow them. Parents can also encourage children to join sports or other activities so that they have less time to spend online.

注释： limit 限制；distraction 干扰；suitable 合适的；balance 平衡
