中考英语完形填空：学做红豆糕

完形填空原文

My aunt is good at making traditional Chinese snacks. Last week, she came to visit and offered to teach me how to make red bean cakes. I had eaten them many times but never tried to make them 1.

First, we needed to prepare the red bean paste. Aunt soaked the red beans in water overnight. The next morning, she boiled them until they became soft. Then she mashed them and mixed in some sugar. The paste looked smooth and had a 2 sweet smell.

Next came the sticky rice flour. We mixed it with a little water to form a soft dough. Aunt said we shouldn't add too much water, or the dough would become too 3 to handle. I kneaded the dough carefully until it felt smooth.

Then we divided the dough into small balls. We flattened each ball, put a spoonful of red bean paste in the center, and wrapped the dough around it. We had to make sure the paste didn't 4 out. Aunt showed me how to pinch the edges together neatly.

After that, we pressed each ball into a round, flat shape. Aunt had a wooden mold with a flower pattern. We put the cake in the mold and pressed it down. When we 5 it out, there was a pretty design on top.

We steamed the cakes for about fifteen minutes. When we opened the lid, the kitchen was filled with a wonderful 6. The cakes looked shiny and smelled delicious. I couldn't wait to try one.

Aunt said we should let them cool a bit first. When I took my first bite, the outside was soft and chewy, and the inside was sweet and smooth. It tasted even better than the ones from the bakery. I felt 7 of myself for making something so tasty.

Aunt wrapped some cakes for me to take home. I shared them with my parents and classmates. Everyone said they were delicious. Making red bean cakes is not very 8, but it requires patience. I hope to learn more traditional recipes from Aunt. Food made with love always tastes the best, and the 9 of learning from family is something I will always 10.
