中考英语完形填空：学做玉米面饼

完形填空原文

My grandmother comes from the north of China, where people often eat corn pancakes. Last Sunday she decided to teach me how to make them. I had never tried corn flour before and was curious about the 1.

Grandma said we needed corn flour, wheat flour, warm water, and a pinch of salt. She mixed them in a large bowl. The ratio of corn to wheat flour was important—too much corn would make the pancakes 2. I helped her stir the mixture until it became a soft dough. Then we let it rest for about fifteen minutes. Grandma said this step could not be 3 because the dough needed time to absorb the water.

Next, we divided the dough into small balls and flattened each one with our hands. Grandma showed me how to make them round and of equal 4. I tried my best but my first few were a bit uneven. She smiled and said I would get better with practice. We heated a flat pan and brushed a thin layer of oil on it. When the pan was hot enough, we placed the pancakes on it. We had to 5 them over when one side turned golden brown.

The smell of the cooking pancakes filled the kitchen. I could not wait to taste them. When they were done, Grandma put them on a plate. I took a bite—the outside was slightly crispy and the inside was soft. They tasted 6 than I had expected. Grandma said we could eat them with savory dishes or spread some sauce on top. I had two pancakes for lunch and felt full and 7.

Making corn pancakes with Grandma was a meaningful experience. She told me this was a traditional food from her hometown. Learning to make it helped me understand her 8 and the food culture of northern China. I will try to make these pancakes again and maybe 9 the recipe with my friends. Traditional food connects us to our roots and brings 10 to our table.
