中考英语完形填空：期末复习互助小组

完形填空原文

The final exams were coming in two weeks. Many students in our class felt stressed, especially about math and physics. Our class monitor had a great idea: why not form study groups so we could 1 each other?

Our teacher agreed and helped us organize. She divided the class into six groups of seven or eight students. Each group had at least one student who was 2 in math and one who was good at English. This way, everyone could learn from each other's strengths.

My group met every afternoon after school in the library. We made a study 3 for the two weeks. On Monday and Wednesday, we focused on math. On Tuesday and Thursday, we worked on English. Friday was for other subjects.

During our first meeting, Zhang Hua explained a difficult math formula to us. He was very 4 at explaining things step by step. I had struggled with that formula for days, but after his explanation, I finally understood it. I felt so 5 that I wanted to shout "Yes!" in the library.

In return, I helped the group with English grammar. I made a simple chart showing the 6 between the present perfect tense and the simple past tense. Several classmates said my chart was very helpful and asked if they could take photos of it.

As the days went by, our group became more and more 7. We not only studied together but also encouraged each other. When someone felt tired or hopeless, the others would say, "Don't worry. We'll get through this 8."

On the day before the exam, we had a final review session. Everyone felt more 9 than before. Zhang Hua said, "No matter what the results are, I'm glad we studied together. It made the hard work much more enjoyable."

After the exams, most of us did better than expected. Our teacher said our study group was a great 10. I believe that when we help others, we also help ourselves.
