中考英语完形填空：学做豆沙包

完形填空原文

Red bean paste buns, or dousha bao, are a popular traditional Chinese snack. Last weekend, my grandmother taught me how to make them. She said she had been making these buns since she was a 1 girl.

First, we prepared the red bean paste filling. Grandmother had soaked the red beans overnight. She boiled them until they were very soft, then mashed them with a spoon and added sugar. The paste had to be smooth and not too 2. I helped stir the mixture over low heat until the extra water dried up.

Next, we made the dough. Grandmother mixed flour, yeast, sugar, and warm water in a big bowl. She told me to 3 the dough with my hands for about fifteen minutes. "The more you knead, the softer the buns will be," she said. My arms felt tired, but I did not 4.

After the dough had risen for an hour, we divided it into small round pieces. Grandmother showed me how to flatten each piece with my palm and put a spoonful of red bean paste in the 5. Then she carefully folded the dough around the filling and pinched it shut at the top. Her buns were round and beautiful, while mine were a bit 6.

We placed the buns in a steamer and cooked them for fifteen minutes. When the lid was 7, clouds of steam came out. The buns had become big and white, and they smelled amazing. I took one and bit into it—the soft dough and sweet filling were a 8 match.

Grandmother smiled and said, "You did a great job for your first time. 9 makes perfect." I felt proud of myself. I plan to make dousha bao for my family during the Spring Festival. Nothing says "home" like food made with 10.
