School Volunteering: Learning by Helping Others

Many schools encourage students to take part in volunteering activities. Instead of only studying in the classroom, students go out to help their community—visiting the elderly, cleaning up parks, tutoring younger children, or raising money for those in need. [1] In fact, volunteering is not just about giving; it is also about learning. When students help others, they develop new skills, meet people from different backgrounds, and see the world from a new angle. They learn that their actions can make a real difference. That is why volunteering is increasingly seen as an important part of education, not just an extra activity.

What skills do students gain from volunteering? [2] They learn to work in teams, communicate with different people, and solve problems in real situations. Organising a charity run or a food drive requires planning, teamwork, and persistence. Students may also discover interests they never knew they had—for example, someone who helps at an animal shelter might decide to become a vet（兽医）one day. In other words, volunteering helps students grow both as individuals and as members of society. The experience often stays with them long after they leave school.

Volunteering also builds empathy and responsibility. [3] When students spend time with elderly people who live alone or with children who need extra help, they begin to understand the challenges others face. This can make them more grateful for what they have and more willing to help in the future. Many students say that volunteering changed how they think about their community and their role in it. For this reason, schools that offer volunteering programmes are not only teaching kindness but also shaping future citizens who care about others.

How can schools support volunteering? [4] They can partner with local charities, nursing homes, or environmental groups to find suitable projects. They can set aside time during the school year for volunteering—for example, a "service day" when the whole school takes part. Teachers can help students reflect on what they learned and how they felt after each activity. So with the right support, volunteering becomes a meaningful part of school life rather than something students do only to fulfil a requirement.

[5] In short, school volunteering benefits both the community and the students themselves. It teaches skills that cannot be learned from textbooks alone, builds character, and creates a habit of giving back. Whether it is an hour a week or a project during the holidays, every act of volunteering counts. Remember: when young people learn to care for others, they build a better world for everyone. So next time your school announces a volunteering opportunity, consider joining in—you might surprise yourself with what you can achieve.

- [1] A：
  - 线索：总领义工对学生的教育价值。空前描述"Many schools encourage students to take part in volunteering activities...Instead of only studying in the classroom, students go out to help their community—visiting the elderly, cleaning up parks, tutoring younger children, or raising money for those in need"，空后说明"In fact, volunteering is not just about giving; it is also about learning...When students help others, they develop new skills, meet people from different backgrounds, and see the world from a new angle...They learn that their actions can make a real difference...volunteering is increasingly seen as an important part of education, not just an extra activity"。A选项"That is because volunteering teaches students valuable lessons beyond the classroom"（那是因为义工教给学生课堂之外的宝贵经验）中"That is because"解释义工的育人作用，"teaches...valuable lessons beyond the classroom"与空后develop skills、see the world、important part of education精准对应，衔接顺畅。
- [2] B：
  - 线索：义工期许中学生技能与自我发现。空前设问"What skills do students gain from volunteering?"，空后详述"They learn to work in teams, communicate with different people, and solve problems in real situations...Organising a charity run or a food drive requires planning, teamwork, and persistence...Students may also discover interests they never knew they had—for example, someone who helps at an animal shelter might decide to become a vet one day...volunteering helps students grow both as individuals and as members of society...The experience often stays with them long after they leave school"。B选项"In other words, volunteering helps students develop skills and discover themselves"（换言之，义工帮助学生发展技能并发现自我）中"In other words"概

括空后内容，"develop skills and discover themselves"与空后work in teams、solve problems、discover interests完美呼应，衔接自然。

- [3] C：
  - 线索：义工对同理心与责任感的塑造。空前提出"Volunteering also builds empathy and responsibility"，空后详述"When students spend time with elderly people who live alone or with children who need extra help, they begin to understand the challenges others face...This can make them more grateful for what they have and more willing to help in the future...Many students say that volunteering changed how they think about their community and their role in it...schools that offer volunteering programmes are not only teaching kindness but also shaping future citizens who care about others"。C选项"That is why volunteering shapes students into more caring and responsible people"（因此义工将学生塑造为更有同理心和责任感的人）中"That is why"承接空前及空后结论，"more caring and responsible"与空后empathy、understand challenges、future citizens who care精准对应，逻辑紧密。
- [4] D：
  - 线索：学校对义工活动的支持方式。空前设问"How can schools support volunteering?"，空后列举"They can partner with local charities, nursing homes, or environmental groups to find suitable projects...They can set aside time during the school year for volunteering—for example, a 'service day' when the whole school takes part...Teachers can help students reflect on what they learned and how they felt after each activity...with the right support, volunteering becomes a meaningful part of school life rather than something students do only to fulfil a requirement"。D选项"It is true that schools can create a supportive environment for volunteering"（的确，学校可以为义工活动营造支持性环境）中"It is true that"加强衔接，"supportive environment"与空后partner、set aside time、reflect、right support完美呼应，衔接得当。
- [5] E：
  - 线索：全文收束与社会和学生双赢的总结。空[5]位于结尾段段首，空后总结"school volunteering benefits both the community and the students themselves...It teaches skills that cannot be learned from textbooks alone, builds character, and creates a habit of giving back...Whether it is an hour a week or a project during the holidays, every act of volunteering counts...when young people learn to care for others, they build a better world for everyone...So next time your school announces a volunteering opportunity, consider joining in"。E选项"In conclusion, school volunteering benefits both society and students"（总之，校园义工使社会与学生双双受益）用"In conclusion"总结全文，"benefits both society and students"与空后community and students、skills、character、habit of giving back形成呼应，收束有力。

- 干扰项分析：
    - F. For example, some students volunteer at hospitals during summer holidays.：涉及暑期在医院义工，易被误填[2]或[5]。但F讨论的是具体场景（医院、暑期），而空[2]聚焦义工带来的技能与自我发现，空[5]强调社区与学生的整体受益；F属于个案举例，与空[2]的技能发展、空[5]的宏观总结论述层级不同。F属"主题相关但论述层级错位"型干扰。
