Dragon Boat Festival: Racing on the Water

The Dragon Boat Festival, or Duanwu Festival（端午节）, is one of China's oldest traditions. It falls on the fifth day of the fifth month of the lunar calendar, usually in June. People celebrate it with dragon boat races, zongzi（粽子）, and stories about the poet Qu Yuan. [1] In other words, the festival combines sport, food, and history, bringing families and communities together every year. It is a time to remember the past and enjoy the spirit of teamwork and competition.

Dragon boat racing is the most exciting part of the festival. [2] Teams of paddlers sit in long, narrow boats shaped like dragons and race to the beat of a drum. The drummer at the front sets the rhythm, and everyone must row in time. Races can be short sprints or longer races of several kilometres. Winning requires not only strength but also perfect coordination—if one person is out of sync, the whole boat slows down. Watching dragon boat races has become a popular activity, and many cities hold competitions that attract thousands of spectators.

The festival is also linked to the story of Qu Yuan. [3] Qu Yuan was a loyal minister and poet who lived over 2,000 years ago. When his kingdom fell, he was so sad that he threw himself into a river. According to legend, people raced their boats to save him and threw zongzi into the water so that the fish would not eat his body. Today, eating zongzi—sticky rice wrapped in bamboo leaves—is a way to honour his memory. The story teaches us about loyalty, patriotism, and the importance of remembering those who sacrificed for their country.

Families and communities prepare for the festival in many ways. [4] People hang herbs such as wormwood（艾草）and calamus on their doors to drive away evil spirits and insects. Some parents tie coloured threads around their children's wrists for good luck. In southern China, where dragon boat racing is most popular, villages and towns form teams months in advance and train hard for the races. The festival is also a time for family reunions—relatives gather to make zongzi, watch races, and share a meal.

[5] Whether you are racing, watching, or enjoying zongzi with your family, the festival offers something for everyone. The next time you see a dragon boat cutting through the water, remember the history behind it and the community spirit it represents.

- 干扰项分析：
  - F. For example, many countries now hold dragon boat races as a summer sport.：涉及海外国家举办龙舟赛，易被误填[1]或[2]。但F以"For example"引出国际推广，而空[1]讨论的是端午节的总体内涵（体育、美食、历史、家庭社区），F的"many countries"属于国际层面，与"China's...families and communities"的本土节日焦点不同；空[2]讨论龙舟赛本身的形式（船形、鼓点、节奏），F的"countries hold...as summer sport"属于传播现象，与"paddlers...boats...drum"的具体描写层次不符。F属"主题相关但论述层次错位"型干扰。
