How to Deal with Exam Stress

Exams are a normal part of student life, but they often bring anxiety and pressure. Many students lie awake at night worrying about grades, feel their stomach turn before a test, or panic when they see a difficult question. [1] The good news is that exam stress can be managed with the right approach. Understanding why we feel stressed and learning practical strategies can help you perform better and feel calmer during the exam period.

Preparation is the best way to reduce anxiety. [2] When you have studied well, you enter the exam room with confidence. Start reviewing early—cramming the night before only increases stress. Create a study schedule, break material into small chunks, and use practice tests to familiarize yourself with the format. Feeling prepared reduces the fear of the unknown, which is often the main source of exam stress.

Your body and mind are connected. [3] Physical habits greatly affect how you feel during exams. Get enough sleep—at least 7 to 8 hours before a big test. Exercise regularly to release tension and improve focus. Avoid too much caffeine and junk food, which can make you feel jittery or tired. A rested body supports a calmer mind when it is time to sit down and write.

During the exam itself, simple techniques can help. [4] If you feel overwhelmed, take a few deep breaths. Read each question carefully before answering. If you get stuck, move on and return to difficult questions later. Remember that one difficult question does not define your whole exam. Staying calm under pressure is a skill you can practice and improve over time.

[5] Exam stress is common, but it does not have to control you. With good preparation, healthy habits, and calm strategies during the test, you can turn pressure into positive energy. Believe in yourself, and remember that one exam is just one step in your learning journey.
