中考英语完形填空：一次意外的停电

完形填空原文

It was a typical Saturday evening in the Zhang household. Mr. Zhang was working on his laptop, Mrs. Zhang was watching a drama on her tablet, and their teenage son, Hao, was playing a video game in his room. The house was full of different electronic 1, but nobody was talking to anyone else.

Suddenly, the lights flickered and went out. The Wi-Fi disconnected, and the whole house fell into complete 2. "Oh no, my game!" Hao shouted from his room. Mr. Zhang sighed because his work was 3. Mrs. Zhang walked out with a flashlight. "It seems the whole neighborhood has lost power," she said.

With no screens to look at, the family gathered in the living room. Mrs. Zhang lit a few candles, placing them on the coffee table. The soft, yellow light created a warm, cozy 4. "Well, what do we do now?" Hao asked, feeling completely 5 without his phone.

"Let's play a game," Mr. Zhang suggested. He went to the cabinet and pulled out an old, dusty board game they hadn't touched in years. At first, Hao was 6 to join. But as the game started, he found himself laughing at his father's silly moves. Soon, the living room was filled with cheers and 7.

After the game, they sat around the candles and started to 8. Mr. Zhang told stories about his childhood adventures, and Hao shared some funny things that happened at school. For the first time in months, they were really listening to each other instead of staring at their 9.

Two hours later, the lights suddenly came back on. The screens lit up, and the Wi-Fi connected automatically. But nobody rushed back to their devices. Hao looked at his parents and smiled. "Can we leave the lights 10 for a little longer?" he asked. Sometimes, a little darkness is exactly what we need to see each other clearly.
