中考英语完形填空：一次失败的演出

完形填空原文

The school talent show was the most awaited event of the year. Liu Peng and his two best friends had formed a band and practiced for two months to perform a rock song. They called themselves "The Dreamers."

When the day finally arrived, the auditorium was full of students and teachers. Liu Peng, as the lead singer and guitarist, felt a mix of excitement and 1. He had visualized this moment a hundred times — the stage lights, the cheering crowd, and the perfect music.

Finally, it was their turn. They walked onto the stage like rock stars. The crowd clapped 2. Liu Peng plugged in his guitar, struck the first powerful chord, and ready to sing. But instead of music, a loud, sharp 3 came from the speakers. It sounded like an angry animal.

Everyone covered their 4. Liu Peng froze in shock. His bandmates looked at him, confused. The sound engineer backstage quickly waved his hands, signaling that the amplifier had completely 5 down. Without the amplifier, an electric guitar makes almost no sound.

For a moment, there was terrible silence in the hall. Liu Peng felt his face turning entirely red. He wanted to drop his guitar and run away from the 6. It was a complete disaster. Two months of hard work, only to end in silence before it even began.

Then, someone in the front row started clapping slowly. It was Mr. Gao, their history teacher. Soon, a few more students joined in. Then the whole auditorium was clapping, not for the music, but for their 7.

"Sing it anyway!" someone shouted from the back.

Liu Peng looked at his friends. They nodded. He took a deep breath, stepped away from the broken microphone, and strummed his unamplified guitar as hard as he could. Then, he started to sing at the top of his 8. His friends joined in on the drums and bass.

It wasn't a perfect rock concert, and the music was barely loud enough to fill the room. But the raw energy and passion were undeniable. The audience started clapping 9 with the beat.

When they finished, the crowd gave them a standing ovation. As they walked off the stage, Liu Peng realized something important: Success isn't about everything going perfectly; it's about not giving up when things go 10.
