中考英语完形填空：深夜的台灯

完形填空原文

Liu Mei was in her last year of middle school. The final exam was only one month away, and she studied very hard every night. Her desk lamp was always the last light on in the whole 1.

Her father worked at a factory and came home late every day. He was not good with words, and he 2 said "I love you" or gave her hugs. Liu Mei sometimes felt that her father didn't care about her.

One night, Liu Mei was studying math at her desk. It was already past midnight. She was so 3 that she could hardly keep her eyes open. She decided to get a glass of water from the kitchen.

When she 4 her bedroom door, she was shocked. Her father was sitting on a small chair in the dark hallway, right outside her room. He had fallen asleep with his head leaning against the wall.

"Dad?" Liu Mei whispered. Her father 5 up immediately. "Oh, you're still awake? I was just... checking if the front door was locked," he said quickly, looking a little embarrassed.

But Liu Mei noticed a 6 beside him — a cup of warm milk and two biscuits on a small plate. They were for her. She suddenly 7 that every morning when she woke up, there was always a glass of milk on her desk. She had thought her mother made it, but her mother always went to bed before ten.

Liu Mei's eyes filled with 8. She finally realized that her father showed love not through words, but through small, quiet actions — waiting outside her door every night, making sure she was fine, and preparing milk for her without ever 9 it.

She took the milk and biscuits. "Thanks, Dad," she said softly. Her father smiled, and that simple smile was 10 a thousand words.
