中考英语完形填空：陌生人的雨伞

完形填空原文

It was a rainy afternoon when I walked out of the bookstore. I had bought a new novel and couldn't wait to read it. But the sky had turned dark and heavy rain was falling. I stood under a small roof, 1 what to do. I had no umbrella and my house was a twenty-minute walk away.

A woman in her fifties came out of the bookstore and opened her umbrella. She looked at me and said, "It's going to rain for a while. Would you like to 2 my umbrella? I live just around the corner."

I was surprised. "But how will you get home?" I asked.

She smiled. "I'll be fine. I can run. You have a long 3 ahead. Take it."

Before I could refuse, she had put the umbrella in my hand and walked into the rain. I 4 her go, feeling both grateful and a little guilty. I didn't even know her name.

I walked home slowly under the umbrella. The rain beat against it, but I stayed dry. When I arrived, I asked my mother how I could 5 the umbrella to the woman. "She said she lives around the corner from the bookstore," I explained.

My mother thought for a moment. "There are many 6 in that area. But you could leave the umbrella at the bookstore and ask them to keep it for someone who describes it. Or — did she mention anything else?"

"She said she often goes there to read," I said.

The next day, I went back to the bookstore. The owner, an old man, nodded when I described the woman. "I know her. She comes here every Saturday. I'll 7 her the umbrella when she returns."

A week later, I visited the bookstore again. The owner smiled and said, "She got her umbrella. She also asked me to give you this." He handed me a small 8. Inside was a note: "Kindness is like a seed. When you plant it, it grows."

I never met that woman again. But her words stayed with me. Since then, I have tried to help 9 when I can — lending a pen, carrying heavy bags, or simply smiling at someone who looks sad. I learned that a small act of kindness can 10 someone's day, and it costs nothing.
