中考英语完形填空：爷爷的旧怀表

完形填空原文

My grandfather had an old pocket watch. He had carried it for over fifty years. The silver cover was worn and the hands moved slowly, but Grandpa 1 it. He said it reminded him of his father, who had given it to him when he turned eighteen.

When I was a child, I loved to sit on Grandpa's knee and watch him take out the watch. He would open the cover, show me the numbers, and tell me stories about the past. "Time goes by 2,", he often said. "Use it well."

Last spring, Grandpa fell ill. He stayed in the hospital for two weeks. When he came home, he was weak. One afternoon, he called me to his room. "I want to give you something," he said. He placed the old watch in my 3. "Take good care of it. And remember — every minute counts."

I didn't know what to say. I was honored, but also sad. It felt like he was saying goodbye.

Grandpa passed away that summer. For a long time, I couldn't bring myself to look at the watch. It made me 4 him too much. I kept it in a drawer, wrapped in a soft cloth.

Then came my first big exam in junior high — the mid-term test. I was nervous. The night before, I couldn't sleep. I thought about Grandpa's words: "Every minute counts." I took out the watch. I held it in my hand and imagined Grandpa 5 me to do my best. Somehow, I felt calmer.

The next day, I put the watch in my pocket during the exam. When I felt worried, I touched it. It was like having Grandpa beside me. I finished the exam with more 6 than I had expected.

Since then, the watch has become my lucky charm. But more importantly, it reminds me of Grandpa's lesson: time is precious. We can't 7 it back. So I try to waste less time on my phone and spend more time reading, learning, and being with my family.

On Grandpa's birthday every year, I wind the watch and let it run for a while. Though it no longer keeps perfect time, it still 8 me of the love that has passed from one generation to another. Some things — like love and wisdom — never grow old. They are 9 from the past and carried into the future. That is the real 10 Grandpa left me.
