中考英语完形填空：最后的值日

完形填空原文

It was the last duty day of the term. Tomorrow we would have our graduation ceremony, and then summer break would begin. For three years, Li Na and I had been on duty together every Tuesday. This would be our 1 time.

We arrived at the classroom early. The room was quiet — no students, no noise. Just empty desks and the blackboard we had cleaned so many times 2. "It feels strange," Li Na said. "I've always complained about doing duty, but now I don't want it to end."

I knew exactly what she meant. We had often hurried through our duties, 3 to go home. But today we moved slowly. We swept the floor carefully. We wiped every desk. We watered the plants by the window. We wanted to do everything perfectly, as if doing it well would somehow make the moment last 4.

"When did we grow up?" Li Na asked suddenly. "It feels like yesterday we were nervous first-year students, afraid of making mistakes. Now we're about to leave."

I didn't have an answer. Time had passed so quickly. The classroom had witnessed our laughter, our tears, and our growth. Every scratch on the desk, every mark on the wall — they all told 5 of our three years here.

We finished our duties and stood at the door, looking back at the room. "Should we leave a note for the next class?" Li Na suggested. "Something to encourage them?"

We found a piece of paper and wrote: "Take care of this classroom. It will take care of you. — The last duty team of Class 3." We stuck it on the wall near the door. Maybe the new students would see it and feel the same 6 we had felt for this place.

As we walked out, Li Na took one last look. "Thank you," she said quietly. I wasn't sure if she was talking to me or to the classroom. Perhaps both. We had 7 this space together, and it had given us more than a place to study — it had given us memories and friendships that would last a lifetime.

The hall was empty. Our footsteps echoed. For the first time, I realized that leaving wasn't just about moving to a new school. It was about 8 a chapter of our lives and stepping into the next one with courage and hope.

I'll never forget that last duty day. It taught me that even the most ordinary tasks can become meaningful when we 9 them with our hearts. Sweeping the floor, wiping the desks — these small acts were our way of saying goodbye to a place we had loved.

Li Na and I promised to stay in touch. We might do duty in different schools next year, but we would always remember this day — the day we cleaned the classroom together for the last time and said goodbye to our 10 middle school life.
