中考英语完形填空：失而复得的手表

完形填空原文

My grandfather gave me a watch on my twelfth birthday. It was not an expensive watch — just a simple silver one with a leather strap. But to me, it was the most 1 thing I owned, because Grandpa had worn it for twenty years before passing it to me.

One afternoon, I took the watch off during P.E. class and put it in my bag. When the class was over, I reached into my bag and felt my heart 2. The watch was gone.

I searched everywhere — under the bench, around the track, even in the trash can. 3. I felt like crying. How could I lose something so important?

I told our P.E. teacher, Mr. Chen. He announced it to the whole class: "If anyone has seen a silver watch, please return it. No questions 4."

Nobody came forward. I went home feeling terrible. That night, I couldn't sleep. I kept thinking about Grandpa's face when he gave me the watch. "Take good care of it," he had said with a 5 smile. And I had failed.

The next morning, something 6 was sitting on my desk when I walked into the classroom. It was a small box wrapped in notebook paper. Inside was my watch, along with a handwritten note: "I'm sorry I took it. I thought it was cool and I wanted to try it on. I didn't mean to keep it. Please 7 me."

There was no name on the note. I looked around the room, but nobody looked guilty. I held the watch tightly and felt a wave of 8 wash over me.

During lunch break, I stood up in front of the class. "I got my watch back," I said. "I don't know who returned it, but I want to say thank you. It takes courage to 9 a mistake. I'm not angry. I'm just grateful."

The classroom was quiet. Somewhere in the back row, I saw a boy's eyes turn 10. He blinked quickly and looked down. I didn't say anything more. Some things are better left unspoken.
