中考英语完形填空：最后一个暑假

完形填空原文

This was my last summer before senior high school. I knew everything would 1 after the new term started. New school, new friends, new challenges. I wanted to make this summer special.

My best friend, Chen Yu, had the same idea. "Let's do something we'll remember forever," he said one morning. We made a list: climb the small mountain behind our town, learn to cook three dishes, read five books, and 2 our grandmothers at least once a week.

The mountain climb was harder than we expected. Halfway up, I wanted to 3. Chen Yu said, "We've come this far. Let's finish what we started." His words encouraged me. When we reached the top, the view was amazing. We sat there for an hour, 4 nothing, just enjoying the moment.

Visiting our grandmothers became the best part of the week. My grandmother lived alone. She was always 5 to see me. She taught me how to make her famous dumplings. "You'll need this when you grow up," she said with a smile. I realized I had been too busy with homework to spend time with her. I felt a little 6.

By the end of the summer, we had completed our list. But the real 7 was not the list itself. It was the time we spent together, the talks we had, and the memories we created. Chen Yu and I promised to stay friends no matter how far apart we would be.

The last day of summer, we rode our bikes to the river. We threw small stones into the water and watched the ripples spread. "Some friendships are like those ripples," Chen Yu said. "They never really 8." I knew what he meant. True friendship lasts.

Now I'm in senior high. Things have changed, but Chen Yu and I still meet when we can. That summer taught me to 9 the present. Don't wait for the "right time" to do what matters. The best time is now.

That was my last summer as a junior high student. I will never 10 it.
