中考英语完形填空：星空下的帐篷

完形填空原文

My dad promised to take me camping for years, but he was always too 1 with work. "Next time," he would say. "Next time" never came — until last weekend.

On Saturday morning, Dad put a tent, sleeping bags, and a small cooler into the car. We drove for two hours to a lake in the mountains. The air was fresh, and the water was so 2 that we could see the stones at the bottom.

Setting up the tent was harder than we thought. Neither of us had done it before. We read the instructions three times, but the tent still looked like a sad, droopy balloon. We 3 for almost an hour before it finally stood up straight.

"Not bad for beginners," Dad said, wiping sweat from his forehead. I laughed. We were both terrible at camping, but it didn't 4.

In the afternoon, we tried fishing. Dad was surprisingly 5 — he caught nothing for two hours. I, on the other hand, caught a small fish on my first try. Dad's mouth dropped open. "Beginner's luck!" he said. I just grinned.

For dinner, we cooked the fish over a small fire. It was a little burned on the outside and a little raw on the 6, but we ate every bite. Everything tasted better outdoors.

As the sun set, the sky turned from orange to purple to 7. Then, one by one, the stars appeared. I had never seen so many stars in my life. In the city, the lights were too bright to see them. But here, the sky looked like someone had scattered a million tiny diamonds across a black cloth.

"Dad, this is amazing," I whispered.

Dad lay beside me on the grass, his hands behind his head. "I'm sorry it took me so long to do this," he said 8. "I should have made time earlier."

I leaned against his shoulder. "It doesn't matter when," I said. "What matters is that we're here 9."

We stayed up late that night, talking about everything — school, his childhood, our favorite movies. I realized that I hadn't talked to my dad like this in a very long 10. Sometimes, all you need is a tent, a sky full of stars, and someone you love beside you.
