中考英语完形填空：咖啡馆的留言本

完形填空原文

There is a small café near my school. I often go there after class to do my homework. One afternoon, I noticed a thick notebook on the corner table. A sign above it said: "Please 1 your story."

I opened it and began to read. Each page was filled with short notes — some were about happy moments, some about 2. A student had written about passing an exam. A mother had written a letter to her daughter. An old man had drawn a simple picture of a sunset.

I was deeply 3. These strangers had shared their hearts in this little book. I wanted to add something too, but I didn't know what to write.

That night, I thought about my week. I had argued with my best friend over something silly. We hadn't 4 for three days. I felt sad and also a little stupid — the argument wasn't worth losing a friend.

The next day, I returned to the café. I took a pen and wrote: "To my friend: I'm sorry. I 5 our friendship more than being right. — From someone who misses you."

I didn't sign my name. I wasn't ready to show it to my friend yet. But writing it down made me feel 6. Sometimes we need to find the courage to say things, even if we say them first to ourselves.

A week later, I went back to the café and checked the notebook. Someone had written below my note: "If you're the one who wrote the message above — your friend probably 7 you too. Don't wait too long."

That message gave me the courage I needed. I called my friend that evening. We talked for an hour and made up. She said she had been waiting for me to reach out.

Now I visit the café regularly. I still write in the notebook sometimes. It has become a place where people support each other 8 they have never met. A simple notebook connected me not only to my friend but also to the kindness of strangers.

I learned that words have power. When we 9 our feelings, we open the door for understanding. The café has a 10 atmosphere that makes everyone feel at home. And sometimes, a simple notebook can change everything.
