中考英语完形填空：天台的日落

完形填空原文

Our school building has six floors, and on the top there is a small rooftop. Students are not usually 1 to go up there, but one day after a difficult exam, I found the door unlocked. I climbed the stairs and stepped outside.

The view took my breath away. The sun was setting over the city. The sky turned from blue to orange, then to soft pink. For the first time in weeks, I felt 2. All my worries about the exam seemed to fade away.

I sat down on the warm concrete and watched. A bird flew across the sky. Somewhere below, I could hear the 3 of cars and people, but up here it felt like a different world. I thought about the pressure I had been under — staying up late, worrying about grades, forgetting to eat properly. Was it all really so important?

That moment on the rooftop changed something in me. I realized that life is not only about exams and scores. There are 4 things — like this sunset — that no test can measure. Beauty, peace, and the simple joy of being alive.

The next day, I told my best friend about the rooftop. We started going there together whenever we needed a break. Sometimes we talked. Sometimes we sat in 5, just watching the sky. It became our secret place.

One evening, we saw our math teacher, Mr. Chen, standing by the railing. He smiled when he saw us. "I come here too," he said. "Even teachers need to 6 sometimes." We laughed. It was comforting to know that adults felt the same way.

Now I visit the rooftop at least once a week. I've learned that it's okay to step away from the rush of daily life. Taking a moment to 7 the world around us can recharge our energy and clear our minds.

Find your own rooftop — a place where you can breathe, think, and remember what truly 8. When you feel 9, remember that sometimes the best 10 we can give ourselves is permission to slow down.
