中考英语完形填空：毕业季的告白

完形填空原文

Graduation was only two weeks away. I had known Li Ming for three years — we sat next to each other in class, shared snacks at break time, and helped each other with homework. But I had never told him how much his friendship meant to me.

One afternoon, I found a note on my desk. It said: "Meet me at the old oak tree after school. — L.M." My heart 1. Was this what I thought it was?

I arrived early and waited. When Li Ming appeared, he looked nervous. "I have something to tell you," he said. "Before we all go to different high schools, I didn't want to 2 any regrets."

I held my breath. "You've been my best friend since seventh grade," he continued. "You made me laugh when I was sad. You 3 me when I failed the math test. I just wanted to say thank you. Thank you for being you."

I was so moved that I couldn't speak for a moment. Then I said, "I feel the same way. I was actually planning to tell you the same thing. I was 4 you wouldn't want to hear it."

We both laughed. The tension melted away. We sat under the tree and talked for over an hour — about our memories, our dreams, and our hopes for the future. It was one of the best 5 we had ever had.

"What if we go to different schools and lose touch?" Li Ming asked suddenly.

"Then we'll make sure we don't," I said. "We can text every week. We can meet during holidays. Friendship doesn't 6 just because we're in different places."

He smiled. "I'm glad I wrote that note."

"So am I," I said. "Some things are too important to leave unsaid. We almost 7 our chance to say them."

On graduation day, we took a photo together under the old oak tree. We promised to stay in touch. That conversation taught me something valuable: don't wait for the "right moment" to express your 8. The right moment might be now. And the people who matter deserve to know how much they 9.

If you have something to say to someone, say it. Don't let the chance 10 by.
