中考英语完形填空：地铁站的音乐家

完形填空原文

Every morning on my way to school, I pass through the underground station. Usually I'm in a hurry — checking my phone, worried about being late. But one Monday, I heard something that made me 1.

A man was playing the violin in the corner. His eyes were closed. The music filled the tunnel. People rushed past him, but he didn't seem to 2. He was lost in his own world. I stood still and listened. For three whole minutes, I forgot about my math test. I forgot about the crowded train. I only heard the music.

When he finished, I walked over and dropped some coins into his case. "Thank you," he said. "That was 3. You're the first person who actually stopped to listen today." I felt a little sad. So many people had walked by without hearing a note.

"That's okay," he said, as if reading my mind. "Music isn't for everyone at every moment. But for those who need it, it's there. That's why I play — not for the money, but for the 4 who might need a moment of beauty in their busy day."

His words changed how I saw street performers. They weren't just asking for money. They were 5 a gift — the gift of art, freely given. Whether we accepted it or not was up to us.

Since then, I try to slow down when I pass through the station. Sometimes I stay for one song. Sometimes I just pause for a few seconds. That small 6 makes a difference. It reminds me that life isn't only about getting from place A to place B. There's beauty along the way, if we're willing to notice it.

Last week, I saw a young girl standing near the violinist, listening with her eyes closed. She looked peaceful. I thought about what the musician had said — "for those who need it, it's there." Maybe that girl was having a 7 day. Maybe the music helped. We never know how a simple melody might 8 someone's morning.

So the next time you're rushing through a station or a street, take a moment. Listen. You might discover something that changes your day. Art is everywhere, waiting for those who are 9 enough to hear it. And sometimes, the most beautiful moments come when we least 10 them.
