中考英语完形填空：晨跑队的坚持

完形填空原文

Every morning at 6:30, a group of students meets at the school gate. We call ourselves the "Morning Running Team." We run around the playground for 20 minutes before class. It sounds 1, but staying consistent is not easy.

When I first joined, I could only run two laps. I would be out of 2 and want to stop. My legs felt heavy, and my heart was beating fast. "Don't give up. You'll get stronger," said our team leader, Zhang Wei. He had been running for a year and could easily 3 five laps. I decided to follow his example.

Week by week, I ran a little more. By the third month, I could run four laps without 4. I felt proud of my progress. But then winter came. The cold wind made it hard to get out of bed. Many students 5 the team. Only a few of us kept running. On the coldest mornings, we would encourage each other: "If we can run today, we can do 6."

Spring came, and our hard work paid off. In the school sports meeting, our running team won the relay race. The principal praised us for our 7. "You didn't run for medals. You ran for yourselves," he said. "That's the real 8 of sports."

Now I understand that 9 is the key to improvement. Whether it's running, studying, or learning a skill, we need to keep trying. Every small step brings us closer to our 10. The morning run taught me that the best time to start is now.
