中考英语完形填空：便利店的热包子

完形填空原文

Every morning on my way to school, I pass by a small convenience store. The owner, Uncle Wang, stands at the door and greets customers with a warm smile. His store opens at 5:30 a.m. to sell fresh steamed buns to workers who start their day early.

One cold winter morning, I forgot to bring lunch money. I stood outside the store, feeling 1. I had no idea how I would get through the day.

"Hey, young friend!" Uncle Wang called out. "You look cold. Come in and warm up."

I shook my head. "I... I don't have any money today."

He laughed kindly. "Who said you need money? A warm place is 2 for everyone." He handed me a steamed bun. "Eat this. You need energy for school."

"I can't take it without paying," I said.

"You can 3 me tomorrow," Uncle Wang said. "I trust you. Besides, when I was young, many people helped me. Now it's my turn to help others."

That steamed bun was the warmest thing I had ever tasted. It wasn't just the heat — it was the 4 behind it. From that day on, I always said hello to Uncle Wang when I passed by. Sometimes I would buy an extra bun and leave it for the next person who might need it, just like Uncle Wang had done for me.

One day, I saw a homeless man sitting near the store. He looked hungry. I bought two buns and gave one to him. He thanked me with tears in his eyes. Uncle Wang saw what happened and gave me a thumbs-up. "Kindness is like a 5. It spreads from one person to another," he said.

Years have passed. I still visit Uncle Wang's store whenever I can. His small act of kindness changed how I see the world. In a busy city where everyone seems to 6 past each other, a warm bun and a friendly smile can make all the difference. We don't need to do 7 things to help. Sometimes a simple gesture is enough to 8 someone's day — or even their life.

Uncle Wang never asked for anything in return. He just wanted to pass on the warmth he had once 9. And that's exactly what I'm trying to do too. In a world that often feels cold, we can all be someone's warm steamed bun — a small 10 that says, "I see you. I care. You matter."
