中考英语完形填空：养蚕宝宝

完形填空原文

In spring, our science teacher gave each student five silkworm eggs. She told us to observe the silkworms as they grew and to write a report at the end. I was very 1 to take care of them because I had never raised any insects before.

I put the tiny eggs in a small box lined with fresh mulberry leaves. After about ten days, the eggs hatched. Five little silkworms appeared. They were so small that I could barely 2 them. They looked like thin white threads.

Every day, I picked fresh mulberry leaves from the tree in our school garden. The silkworms ate a lot — much more than I had expected. I could hear them chewing if I put my ear close to the box. It was a soft, steady sound that I found 3.

As the weeks passed, the silkworms grew bigger and fatter. They changed their skin several times, which is called moulting. Each time they moulted, they would stop eating for a day or two and stay very 4. I was worried at first, thinking they were sick. But the teacher explained that this was completely normal.

After about a month, something amazing happened. The silkworms began to spin silk. They moved their heads back and forth, producing a thin, shiny 5. Slowly, each silkworm wrapped itself inside a cocoon. Some cocoons were white, and one was slightly yellow. The process took about three days.

I waited patiently for two weeks. Then, one morning, I saw a small hole in one cocoon. A moth was pushing its way 6. It had damp wings and could not fly at first. I watched it rest and dry its wings in the sunlight. By the afternoon, it was fully 7 and began to flutter around.

The whole experience was 8. I learned that silkworms go through four stages: egg, larva, pupa, and moth. This is called complete metamorphosis. Writing the report was easy because I had observed every detail with great interest.

My science teacher gave me a high mark for the project. She said my report was detailed and well-organised. But the 9 reward was not the mark — it was the knowledge I gained and the joy of watching life unfold right before my eyes.

I decided that next spring, I would raise silkworms again. This time, I would take photos at each stage and share them with my classmates. I believe that hands-on experience is the best way to 10 about nature.
