中考英语完形填空：学游泳

完形填空原文

Last summer, my parents signed me up for swimming lessons at the community sports centre. I had always been afraid of water, so I was very 1 about the first lesson.

On the first day, our coach Mr Chen asked us to sit by the pool and watch him demonstrate. He showed us how to hold our breath underwater and how to move our arms and legs. "Swimming is like riding a bicycle," he said. "Once you learn it, you never forget. But you have to overcome your 2 first."

We started with the easiest skill: floating on our backs. I lay down in the shallow water and tried to relax. At first, my body wanted to sink. I was so scared that I 3 out of the water immediately. Mr Chen came over and said, "Trust the water. Breathe slowly. Let your body feel the water holding you." I tried again, and this time I managed to float for a few seconds. It felt like a small 4.

The next few lessons, we practised kicking our legs and moving our arms. We wore float boards to help us stay on the surface. Every time I made a little progress, Mr Chen would give me a thumbs up. His 5 made me want to try harder.

By the fourth lesson, I could swim a short distance without the float board. I was so proud of myself! But then I made a mistake — I breathed at the wrong time and swallowed some water. I started coughing and felt 6. I thought about giving up. But Mr Chen said, "Everyone swallows water when they learn. It's part of the process. Don't let one small problem 7 you."

I took a short rest and went back into the pool. With more practice, I gradually improved. By the end of the two-week course, I could swim across the pool. My parents came to watch the final test and cheered when I 8 the other side.

Learning to swim taught me an important lesson: fear can be overcome with patience and practice. What seemed impossible at first became 9 after I took the first step. Now I enjoy swimming, and I often go to the pool with my friends. The water that once frightened me has become a place of 10.
