中考英语完形填空：班级读书角

完形填空原文

Our class started a reading corner this term. Our headteacher brought a bookshelf and asked each of us to 1 one or two books that we had read and enjoyed. Soon the shelf was full of storybooks, science books, and magazines.

I donated a copy of Robinson Crusoe. I had read it during the summer holiday and found it very 2. I hoped other classmates would enjoy it too. Wang Lei brought three detective stories. Li Na brought a book about space. Our teacher also added some classic novels that she thought we would like.

We made some simple 3. First, we could borrow one book at a time. Second, we had to return it within two weeks. Third, we should keep the books clean and not write or draw in them. Everyone agreed to follow these rules.

At first, only a few students went to the reading corner. Most of us were busy with homework and had little 4 for reading. But our teacher encouraged us to read for at least fifteen minutes every day. "Reading is not a task," she said. "It's a way to explore new worlds and 5 your imagination."

Gradually, more students became interested. During the morning break, some of us would sit by the bookshelf and read. We sometimes shared our thoughts about the books we had read. "Did you finish that mystery story?" "Yes! The ending was 6! I never expected it." These conversations made the reading corner a lively place.

One day, I noticed that a book was missing. It was the one about space that Li Na had brought. We searched everywhere but could not find it. I felt a bit 7. Would the reading corner fall apart if books started disappearing?

The next day, a boy from another class came to our room. He said he had accidentally taken the book home because he thought it was his. He 8 and returned it. We were relieved. The experience taught us that mistakes can happen, but being honest and returning things is the right thing to do.

Now the reading corner is one of the most popular places in our classroom. Many of us have discovered new 9 through the books we read. Some love science fiction, some prefer history, and some enjoy poetry. Reading has brought us closer together and made our class more 10.
