中考英语完形填空：学做寿司

完形填空原文

My cousin from Japan came to visit us during the summer holiday. She offered to teach me how to make sushi. I had eaten sushi in restaurants but had never tried to make it myself. I was 1 to learn.

First, we prepared the ingredients: rice, seaweed, vinegar, sugar, and some fresh vegetables. My cousin said the rice was very important. It had to be cooked in a 2 way and mixed with vinegar and sugar while it was still warm. I watched her carefully as she showed me each step.

The hardest part was spreading the rice on the seaweed. I had to wet my hands to prevent the rice from sticking. I placed a thin layer of rice on the seaweed sheet, but I made it too thick in some places and too thin in others. My cousin smiled and said, "Don't worry. It takes 3. You will get better with practice." She showed me again how to spread the rice evenly.

Then we added the filling. We used cucumber, carrot, and egg. I cut the vegetables into long thin strips. My cousin said the shape and size 4 a lot for the final look of the sushi. I tried to cut them as evenly as possible, but my strips were a bit uneven. "That's okay for the first time," my cousin said kindly.

The next step was rolling. I placed the filling in the middle of the rice and slowly rolled the seaweed sheet. I had to roll it 5 so that it would not fall apart. The first roll was loose and looked messy. The second one was a little better. By the third try, I managed to make a roll that looked almost 6.

We cut the rolls into small pieces. My cousin used a sharp knife and dipped it in water between cuts. I tried to do the same. The pieces were not as neat as hers, but they were acceptable. We arranged them on a plate and 7 them with some soy sauce and wasabi.

When we sat down to eat, I felt proud. The sushi I had made did not taste as good as the restaurant's, but eating it was 8 because I had created something with my own hands. My cousin said, "Making food for others is a way to show love. When you cook for your family, you are giving them something special." I will remember her words and try to 9 more homemade meals for my family. Cooking can be a way to express our care and 10.
