中考英语完形填空：学画画

完形填空原文

This summer, I joined an art class at the community centre. I had always enjoyed drawing, but I had never had proper lessons. The teacher, Mr Wang, was a kind man who had been teaching art for fifteen years.

On the first day, Mr Wang said that anyone could learn to draw. "Drawing is not about talent," he told us. "It's about observation and 1. You need to look carefully at what you want to draw, and then practise again and again."

We started with simple shapes: circles, squares, and triangles. I thought it would be boring, but Mr Wang made it interesting. He said that everything in the world could be broken down into these basic 2. "Even a tree is just many circles and lines," he explained.

After two weeks, we began to draw still life. Mr Wang brought fruits, vases, and flowers to the classroom. We placed them on a table and drew what we saw. My first attempt looked nothing like the real 3. The apple I drew was too round, and the banana was crooked. Mr Wang smiled and said, "Don't worry. Every artist started like this."

I practised at home every day. I drew the cup on my desk, the books on my shelf, and the view from my window. Slowly, my drawings began to improve. I learned to use different shades of pencil to show light and 4. I learned that the background was as important as the main subject.

One afternoon, we went to the park to draw outdoors. I chose to draw an old tree by the lake. I sat on the grass and spent two hours 5 on my sketch. When I showed it to Mr Wang, he said, "You have caught the spirit of the tree. That's what good art is about—not copying exactly, but showing how you 6 it."

The art class ended last week. I was a bit sad, but Mr Wang said we could come back anytime for advice. He gave each of us a small sketchbook as a 7. "Keep drawing," he said. "Draw every day, even if it's just for ten minutes."

I have filled half of my sketchbook already. I draw during breaks at school, on the bus, and before I go to sleep. My classmates often ask me to draw something for them. I feel 8 when they smile at my drawings.

My parents have hung some of my drawings on the living room wall. Every time I look at them, I remember Mr Wang's words: "Art is a way to 9 your feelings. There is no right or wrong. Just be honest with what you see and feel."

I want to continue learning. Maybe one day I will be able to draw portraits or paint with watercolours. For now, I am happy to 10 the world around me through my pencil.
