中考英语完形填空：给老师写感谢信

完形填空原文

Last week was Teacher's Day. I wanted to do something special for my English teacher, Mr Zhang. He has helped me a lot since I entered junior high. I decided to write him a thank-you letter.

I sat down at my desk and took out a piece of nice paper. At first, I did not know how to 1. There were so many things I wanted to say. I thought about the times when Mr Zhang had stayed after class to explain grammar to me. I remembered how he had encouraged me when I failed my first English exam. His words had given me 2 to try again.

I started writing. "Dear Mr Zhang," I wrote. "Thank you for being my teacher. You have taught me not only English but also how to learn. You said that making mistakes is part of learning. Those words 3 me a lot."

I continued to write about the activities in his class. We often did role-plays and group discussions. Mr Zhang made the lessons interesting. He never made us feel 4 when we gave wrong answers. Instead, he would say, "Good try! Now let's see how we can improve."

I also wrote about my progress. At the beginning of the year, I was afraid to speak English in class. Now I can answer questions and even give short 5. This change would not have happened without Mr Zhang's patience and support.

When I finished the letter, I read it again to check for spelling mistakes. I wanted the letter to be 6. I put it in a nice envelope and drew a small heart on the corner. The next morning, I went to the teachers' office and gave the letter to Mr Zhang before class.

He opened it and read it with a smile. Then he looked at me and said, "Thank you. This means a lot to me. Keep up the good work." I felt warm inside. Sometimes we forget to 7 the people who help us. A simple thank-you can make a big difference.

I have kept a copy of the letter in my diary. When I feel discouraged, I read it and remember that there are people who 8 in me. I hope to become a teacher like Mr Zhang one day — someone who inspires students and helps them grow.

Writing the thank-you letter taught me an important 9: we should never take kindness for granted. When someone helps us, we should express our gratitude. A few minutes of writing can bring 10 to both the giver and the receiver.
