中考英语完形填空：学编中国结

完形填空原文

During the Cultural Festival at our school, there was a workshop on making Chinese knots. Chinese knots are traditional decorations that represent good luck and happiness. I had always admired their beautiful 1, so I signed up for the workshop.

The teacher, Mrs. Zhang, had been making Chinese knots for over twenty years. She showed us different types of knots — some were simple, some were complex. For beginners, she said we would start with the basic "good luck" knot. She 2 each step slowly so that we could follow.

First, we needed a long red cord. Mrs. Zhang said that red was the traditional colour because it symbolizes joy and good fortune in Chinese culture. We folded the cord in a specific way and then pulled it through to form loops. My fingers felt clumsy at first. The cord kept slipping and my loops were 3. Mrs. Zhang came over and helped me adjust. "Don't pull too hard. Be gentle with the cord," she advised.

After many attempts, I finally made my first knot. It wasn't perfect, but I was proud of it. Mrs. Zhang smiled and said, "Practice makes 4. You'll get better with time." She encouraged us to take our knots home and practise more.

In the following weeks, I practised whenever I had free time. I made knots of different sizes. I gave one to my grandmother for her birthday. She was very 5 and hung it on the wall of her room. I also made a small one to hang on my school bag. Every time I saw it, I felt a connection to our traditional culture.

Making Chinese knots requires patience and concentration. You have to 6 on each step. If you rush, the knots will be messy. Mrs. Zhang had told us that in the past, people often made Chinese knots during the Spring Festival to bring good luck to their families. The craft has been 7 down from generation to generation.

Now I understand why traditional crafts are so valuable. They are not just beautiful objects — they carry the wisdom and culture of our ancestors. Learning to make Chinese knots has made me 8 our traditions more. I hope to learn more about Chinese traditional arts in the future.

If you have a chance to learn a traditional craft, I would strongly 9 you to try it. You might discover a new hobby and gain a deeper 10 of our culture at the same time.
