中考英语完形填空：学做芝麻汤圆

完形填空原文

The Lantern Festival was coming, and my grandmother said she would teach me how to make sesame tangyuan. Tangyuan are round rice dumplings that stand for family reunion. I had eaten them many times but never made them 1. I was curious and could not wait to learn.

First, Grandma mixed glutinous rice flour with warm water to make the dough. She said the water must not be too hot or the dough would become 2. I helped her knead the dough until it was smooth and soft. Then we divided it into small pieces, each about the size of a walnut. We made a small hole in each piece with our thumbs and put the sesame filling inside. The filling was made of ground black sesame, sugar, and a little butter. It smelled 3.

The next step was to close the hole and roll the dough into a round ball. I had to be careful not to leave any cracks, or the filling would leak out when cooking. My first few tangyuan looked a bit 4, but Grandma said practice makes perfect. I kept trying and my skills improved. Soon I could make round and smooth tangyuan just like 5.

We boiled a pot of water and gently dropped the tangyuan in. When they floated to the surface, we added a little cold water and waited for them to float again. Grandma said this made them 6 soft and chewy. Finally, we served them in sweet ginger soup. The tangyuan looked white and shiny, and tasted wonderful.

Making tangyuan with Grandma was a special experience. She told me that in the past, families would get together to make tangyuan before the festival. It was not just about the food, but about the 7 of being together. I will make tangyuan with my family every Lantern Festival from now on. It is a wonderful 8 to pass down through the generations. I also want to 9 this skill with my younger cousins. Every 10 we spend together in the kitchen is precious.
