中考英语完形填空：学做腊八粥

完形填空原文

Laba porridge is a traditional Chinese food eaten on the eighth day of the twelfth lunar month. My grandfather says it is one of the oldest winter traditions in China. Last year, he taught me how to 1 it from scratch.

The night before, Grandfather and I prepared the ingredients. We needed eight different kinds of grains and beans: rice, millet, red beans, green beans, peanuts, lotus seeds, dried dates, and longan. Grandfather said the number eight is considered 2 in Chinese culture, so using eight ingredients brings good fortune.

First, we soaked the beans and lotus seeds in water 3. Grandfather explained that soaking them makes them softer and easier to cook. "If you skip this step, the beans will be too hard even after hours of cooking," he said.

The next morning, we got up early. Grandfather put all the soaked ingredients into a big pot and added plenty of water. He turned on the stove and brought the water to a 4. Then he turned the heat down to low and let it simmer slowly.

While the porridge was cooking, Grandfather told me stories about Laba Festival. He said that long ago, people made Laba porridge to 5 their ancestors and pray for a good harvest. It was also a way for families to gather and share food during the cold winter.

After about two hours, the porridge became thick and 6. The kitchen smelled wonderful. Grandfather added some rock sugar to make it slightly sweet. He stirred it gently and said, "Good porridge needs time. You cannot 7 it."

We poured the porridge into bowls and sat down to eat. The first spoonful was warm and 8. Each bite had different textures—some soft, some chewy. It was much more interesting than regular porridge.

Grandfather smiled and said, "Laba porridge is not just food. It reminds us to be 9 for what we have and to share with others." I decided to make Laba porridge every year and carry on this beautiful 10.
