05-10 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Mr. Harris was the grumpiest (最脾气暴躁的) man on Elm Street. He lived alone in a large house with a beautiful, perfect front yard. Not a single blade of grass was out of place. He spent his days chasing away birds, shouting at the postman, and strictly warning children never to step on his lawn (草坪).

② "Keep off the grass, you little monsters!" he would yell, waving his wooden walking stick at any child who kicked a ball too close to his fence. Because of this, the children in the neighborhood were terrified of him. They called his house "The Dragon's Castle".

④ Lily began to cry. She loved that kite, but she was too afraid of "The Dragon" to go and get it. She stood on the sidewalk, wiping her tears.

⑤ Suddenly, the front door of the large house opened. Mr. Harris walked out, leaning heavily on his walking stick. He looked at the crying girl, then looked up at the yellow kite in his tree. Lily froze in fear, expecting him to shout.

⑥ Instead, Mr. Harris slowly walked to the garage and pulled out a long ladder. With great effort, he climbed up a few steps and reached the kite. He carefully untangled (解开) the string from the branches and walked back to the fence.

⑦ He handed the yellow kite to Lily. The grumpy lines on his face softened (柔和) into a small, rusty smile. "Here you go, little one. Next time, tie the string tighter," he said gently. Lily stopped crying, took the kite, and smiled back. "Thank you, Mr. Dragon... I mean, Mr. Harris!"

⑧ After that day, the neighborhood children still didn't step on his grass, but they stopped running away when they saw him. Sometimes, Mr. Harris even waved back.

注释： grumpy 脾气暴躁的；lawn 草坪；terrified 害怕的，恐惧的；stick 卡住；ladder 梯子；untangle 解开
