05-16 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Zhang Ming lived in a small apartment building in the city. His next-door neighbor was an old man named Mr. Wang, who lived alone. Mr. Wang was over seventy years old. He walked slowly and sometimes had trouble carrying heavy things. Zhang Ming often saw him going up and down the stairs with difficulty.

② One Saturday morning, Zhang Ming noticed that Mr. Wang's door was closed and he did not hear any sound from inside for two days. He felt a little worried. He knocked on the door and asked, "Mr. Wang, are you OK?" After a few seconds, Mr. Wang opened the door. He looked pale and weak. "I have a cold," he said. "I haven't been able to buy food or medicine. I'm too tired to go out."

③ Zhang Ming immediately went to the supermarket and bought some rice, vegetables, and fruit for Mr. Wang. He also bought medicine for his cold. When he came back, he helped Mr. Wang cook a simple meal. Mr. Wang's eyes were wet. "Thank you, young man," he said. "I have no family here. You are like a grandson to me."

④ From that day on, Zhang Ming decided to help Mr. Wang regularly. Every weekend, he would knock on Mr. Wang's door to see if he needed anything. Sometimes he helped carry groceries (日用品) upstairs. Sometimes he sat with Mr. Wang and talked with him so the old man would not feel lonely. Zhang Ming's parents supported him. "Helping others makes our community a better place," his mother said.

⑤ One day, Mr. Wang told Zhang Ming, "You have taught me something important. Kindness can make a big difference in someone's life." Zhang Ming smiled. He did not help Mr. Wang to get a reward — he did it because it was the right thing to do. And in return, he learned that even small acts of kindness can bring warmth to both the helper and the one who receives help.

注释： pale 苍白的；groceries 日用品；community 社区；reward 回报；warmth 温暖
