06–07 第1篇

阅读理解（说明文）

① Chopsticks (筷子) have been used in China for over 3,000 years. Long ago, people used wooden sticks to pick up food from boiling pots because it was too hot to touch. Over time, these sticks became thinner and longer. They spread to other Asian countries such as Japan and Korea. Today, chopsticks are still widely used in daily meals.

注释： silver 银；poisonous 有毒的；funeral 葬礼
