06-14 第2篇

阅读理解（议论文）

① Will printed newspapers disappear? Many people ask this question as more and more readers turn to smartphones and computers for news. Some believe that paper newspapers will soon be a thing of the past. Others think they will stay. Let us look at both sides.

② Why printed newspapers are declining: The number of people who read paper newspapers has dropped a lot in recent years. Most young people get news from the Internet. Online news is free, fast, and easy to share. It also updates all the time. Why buy a paper that is printed once a day when you can read the latest news on your phone anytime? Many newspapers have closed because they could not make enough money. Advertisers prefer to put their ads online where more people can see them.

④ What might happen in the future: Experts say printed newspapers will probably not disappear completely, but they will become less common. They may become something special — like a weekend edition that people buy for deeper reading. Smaller local newspapers might close, but big national newspapers may survive by offering both paper and online versions. The key is to change with the times.

⑤ In the end, we cannot be sure what will happen. What we know is that the way people get news has changed, and it will keep changing. Whether paper newspapers stay or go, good journalism (新闻工作) will always be important.

注释： decline 减少；reliable 可靠的；journalism 新闻工作
