06-15 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① Last summer, Wang Lin, a 14-year-old student from a small town, took his first flight to visit his uncle in Beijing. He had never been on a plane before. "I was excited but also a little nervous," Wang Lin said. His mother went with him to the airport and helped him check in. She reminded him to listen to the flight attendants (乘务员) and stay in his seat during the flight.

② At the gate, Wang Lin showed his boarding pass (登机牌) and walked through the tunnel into the plane. He found his seat by the window. A friendly flight attendant smiled and said, "First time flying? Don't worry. If you need anything, just press the button above your head." Wang Lin nodded and fastened his seat belt. He looked out of the window and watched the ground become smaller as the plane rose higher and higher.

③ During the flight, the plane met some clouds and shook a bit. Wang Lin held the armrests (扶手) tightly. He felt his heart beating fast. Then he remembered what his mother had said: "Turbulence (颠簸) is normal. Just breathe slowly." He closed his eyes, took a few deep breaths, and soon felt better. A man sitting next to him said, "You're doing great. My first flight was much scarier."

④ About two hours later, the pilot announced that they would land in twenty minutes. Wang Lin saw the buildings and roads of Beijing below. When the plane touched the ground, everyone clapped. Wang Lin smiled. He had made it! His uncle was waiting at the arrival hall. "How was the flight?" his uncle asked. "It was amazing," Wang Lin replied. "I want to fly again."

⑤ Back home a week later, Wang Lin told his classmates about his trip. "Flying seemed scary at first, but it wasn't so bad. If you stay calm and follow the rules, you'll be fine," he said. His friends listened and some said they also wanted to try flying one day.

注释： flight attendant 乘务员；boarding pass 登机牌；armrest 扶手；turbulence 颠簸
