The Voice on Stage

① Li Ming had always loved to sing. At home, he would sing when no one was around. But the thought of singing in front of others made his heart beat fast and his hands shake. He had stage fright (怯场). When the school announced a singing competition, his music teacher, Ms. Chen, encouraged him to join. "You have a beautiful voice," she said. "You just need to believe in yourself." Li Ming was not sure, but he decided to try.

④ Then he thought of Ms. Chen's words. He took a deep breath, closed his eyes for a second, and began to sing. His voice was clear and steady. As the music filled the hall, his fear slowly faded. When he finished, the audience clapped loudly. Li Ming smiled. He had done it — he had overcome his fear.

⑤ That day, Li Ming did not win first place. But he won something more important: the courage to stand on stage and share his gift. From then on, he knew that with practice and belief, he could face any challenge. Sometimes the bravest thing we can do is to try, even when we are afraid.

注释： stage fright 怯场；backstage 后台；tremble 颤抖；steady 平稳的
