Letters Across the Distance

① Last summer, Zhang Wei's family moved to a new city because of his father's job. Zhang Wei had to leave his old school and his best friend, Liu Yang. They had been friends since the first grade. On the day he left, Liu Yang came to say goodbye at the bus station. "We will always be friends," Liu Yang said. Zhang Wei nodded, but his eyes were wet. He was not sure how they could stay close when they lived so far apart.

② The first weeks in the new city were hard. Zhang Wei missed his old neighborhood, his old school, and Liu Yang the most. He tried to make new friends, but it was not easy. Sometimes he sat alone and thought about the days they spent playing basketball or doing homework together. He felt lonely.

③ One evening, Zhang Wei's mother gave him a pen and some paper. "Why not write to Liu Yang?" she said. "Letters can cross any distance." Zhang Wei had never written a real letter before. He sat down and began to write. He told Liu Yang about his new school, his new classmates, and how much he missed their friendship. A week later, he received a letter back. Liu Yang had written about his life too. Reading it, Zhang Wei smiled. It felt as if his friend were right there with him.

⑤ Moving away does not have to mean saying goodbye forever. Zhang Wei learned that friendship can cross any distance — as long as we are willing to reach out. A simple letter can keep the bond between friends strong, no matter how far apart they are.

注释： nod 点头；neighborhood 街区；bond 纽带
