① Should We Have PE Class Every Day?

② In many schools in China, students have physical education (PE) class two or three times a week. Some people think this is not enough. They say schools should hold PE class every day. Others believe that daily PE would take too much time from other subjects. Let us look at both sides of the argument.

③ Those who support daily PE argue that exercise is important for students' health. Young people today spend a lot of time sitting in class and doing homework. Many of them do not get enough exercise. Research shows that regular physical activity helps students stay healthy, sleep better, and even do better in their studies. Supporters also point out that PE class teaches teamwork and builds good habits. If students exercise every day, they are more likely to stay active when they grow up. A healthy body leads to a healthy mind (健康的身体带来健康的心态).

⑤ In my view, having PE class every day is a good idea, but schools need to plan it well. PE does not have to be a full 45-minute class every day. Schools could add short activity breaks (活动时间), such as 15 to 20 minutes of running or simple exercises between classes. In this way, students get more movement without losing much study time. At the same time, schools should improve their sports facilities and train more PE teachers. Health and study are both important. We should find a balance between them.
