08-20 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文）

① During the National Day holiday, twelve-year-old Lin Hao went hiking with his father in the mountains near their hometown. It was a beautiful autumn day. The leaves were red and gold, and the air was fresh. Lin Hao was excited because it was his first time hiking on such a high mountain.

③ At first, Lin Hao felt scared. His heart beat fast, and he wanted to cry. But then he remembered what his father had taught him: "If you ever get lost in the mountains, stay calm. Find a high place, stay where you are, and make noise so people can find you." Lin Hao took a deep breath and climbed onto a large rock. He shouted, "Dad! I'm here!" again and again.

⑤ On the way back, his father said, "I'm proud of you. You stayed calm and used your head. That's what matters most in a difficult situation." Lin Hao smiled. The hike had not gone as planned, but he had learned something important: when you are afraid, staying calm and thinking clearly can help you find a way out.
