Learning to Cook for My Family

① My mum got sick last October. She had to stay in bed for two weeks. My dad works in another city and only comes home on weekends. That meant I had to take care of myself and my younger sister after school. The biggest problem was cooking.

② I had never cooked a real meal before. On the first evening, I tried to make egg fried rice. I put too much oil in the pan. The rice stuck to the bottom and turned brown. My sister looked at the plate and said, "Is this food?" I felt embarrassed, but I also laughed. We ate instant noodles that night.

③ The next day, I called my grandma and asked her to teach me over the phone. She told me step by step how to make tomato and egg soup. "Use two eggs. Cut three tomatoes. Add water first, then put in the tomatoes. When the water boils, pour in the beaten eggs slowly." I followed her instructions carefully. This time, the soup was not bad at all. My sister even asked for a second bowl.

④ Over the next two weeks, I learned to cook several simple dishes: stir-fried vegetables, steamed fish, and porridge. Every evening, I set the table and we ate together. Sometimes the food was too salty or too bland, but my sister always said, "Thank you, brother." Those words meant everything to me.

⑤ When Mum got better, she tasted my cooking and smiled. "You've grown up," she said. I realised that taking care of others is not just a duty — it is also a way to show love. Now I cook for the family every weekend, and I enjoy it.

注释： instant noodles 方便面；bland 淡的
