Helping a Lost Grandmother

① It was a cold afternoon in November. I was walking home from school when I noticed an old woman standing at a crossroads. She looked confused and kept turning around, as if she did not know which way to go. I stopped and asked, "Grandma, are you all right? Do you need help?"

② She looked at me with worried eyes. "I... I can't remember how to get home," she said in a shaky voice. "I went to buy vegetables, but now everything looks different." I could see she was frightened. I asked her if she remembered her address or her family's phone number. She shook her head slowly.

③ I did not know what to do at first. Then I noticed she was carrying a small cloth bag. I asked if I could look inside for any clues. She nodded. In the bag, I found a medicine box with a sticker on it. The sticker had a name and a phone number — it was probably from the hospital. I quickly called the number, but it was the hospital's reception, not her family.

④ I decided to take her to the nearest police station, which was only five minutes away. On the way, I held her arm gently so she would not stumble. She kept saying, "Thank you, child. You are so kind." At the police station, the officers searched their system and found her son's phone number. They called him, and he arrived within twenty minutes. He was almost in tears. "Mum has Alzheimer's disease," he explained. "She sometimes forgets where she is."

注释： crossroads 十字路口；stumble 绊倒；Alzheimer's disease 阿尔茨海默症（老年痴呆症）
