Should Teenagers Help with Housework?

①"Clean your room!" "Wash the dishes!" "Take out the rubbish!" Many parents say these words every day. But should teenagers really help with housework? Some students think homework and exams are enough. They believe housework is a waste of time. I disagree. I think every teenager should do some housework, and here is why.

②First, housework teaches us life skills. When we grow up and leave home, we need to cook, wash clothes, and keep our room clean. If we never practice at home, we will struggle when we live alone. Learning these skills as teenagers makes the future easier. My cousin went to university last year. She could not even boil an egg. She had to learn everything from the beginning. It was hard for her.

③Second, doing housework is fair. Our parents work all day. When they come home, they still cook, clean, and take care of us. If we never help, they have to do everything. That is not fair. Sharing the work shows we care. Even small tasks like setting the table or folding clothes can make a difference.

④Third, housework can reduce stress. After sitting at a desk for hours, doing something physical can clear your mind. I always feel better after I tidy my room. It is like a break from studying. Some students say they have no time. But ten minutes a day is enough. Make your bed in the morning. Put your dishes in the sink after meals. These small habits do not take much time.

⑤Housework is not punishment. It is part of growing up. When we help at home, we learn responsibility, show love to our family, and prepare for the future. So yes, teenagers should help with housework. Start small, and you will see the benefits.
