01–14 第2篇

阅读理解（记叙文） My Shaking Knees on the Stage

① When Miss Lin asked our class to choose a student for the city English speaking competition, everyone looked at me. I got good marks in English tests, but I was the quietest girl in the class. "Anna, would you like to try?" Miss Lin smiled. I wanted to say no, but somehow I nodded.

② During the following three weeks, I practised every evening. I stood in front of a long mirror in my bedroom, tried different smiles, and read my speech again and again. My father helped me check my pronunciation, and my little brother pretended to be the judge. Slowly I could repeat the whole speech without looking at the paper, but my heart still beat fast whenever I thought of the real stage.

③ The big day finally came. Before my turn, I sat backstage and watched other students speak with great confidence. Their voices were strong and clear. My hands became cold, and my knees began to shake. I wanted to run away. Then Miss Lin walked over and put her warm hand on my shoulder. "Anna, just tell them your true story. Forget about the prize."

④ When my name was called, I walked up the stage step by step. The lights were bright, and I could not see the faces below. I took a long breath and started. My voice was a little shaky at first, but I thought of my family, my mirror, my bedroom — and the words came back like old friends. Little by little, I relaxed. I even smiled at the judges.

⑤ I did not win the first prize, but I got a "Most Improved" award. More important than the award, I felt a quiet power inside me. If I could stand on that stage and finish my speech, many other hard things in life would feel less scary. From that day on, I knew that a shy girl could also have a brave heart.
