阅读理解（记叙文） A Little Bird in the Snow

① It snowed heavily the whole night. When I opened the window on Sunday morning, the world outside was covered by a soft white blanket. I quickly put on my thick coat and ran downstairs to help my father clean the small path in front of our house.

② While we were shovelling the snow, I heard a strange sound from the corner of the yard. It was a weak, short cry. I walked closer and saw a small grey bird sitting on the cold ground. Its wing looked hurt, and its eyes were half closed. The poor little thing was shaking in the wind.

④ In the afternoon, we took the bird to the pet hospital. The doctor checked its wing and said it was only a soft injury. "Keep it warm for three or four days," he told us, "then let it fly back when the snow melts." My father also showed me how to clean the box and change the water every morning.

⑤ Five days later, the sun came out and the snow on the roof began to melt. I carried the box to the small garden and opened it. The bird looked at us for a moment, shook its wings, and flew up into a tall tree. Amy waved and shouted, "Fly well!" I felt a quiet happiness in my heart. Helping a small life was not a big thing, but it made our cold winter a little warmer.
