阅读理解（议论文） Should Middle-School Students Do Housework?

① In many Chinese families, parents do almost all the housework by themselves. They say, "Just study hard, and you don't need to wash or sweep." Is that really the best way? I want to talk about why middle-school students should share some housework at home.

② Doing housework is useful training for daily life. When we wash bowls, fold clothes or sweep the floor, we learn how to keep our things neat. These are small skills, but they will help us when we travel for a school trip, live on campus one day, or start working after university. A student who has never cooked even an egg will find it hard to take care of himself in the future.

③ Housework also brings the family closer. When everyone works together on Sunday afternoon, we talk, laugh and understand each other better. I once helped my father clean the windows for an hour. After that, I finally saw how tired he was after a long week. Since then, I have said "thank you" to my parents more often. A simple cloth became a quiet bridge between us.

⑤ In my opinion, every student should have a few "home duties": maybe washing the dishes three times a week, taking out the rubbish every night, or keeping the bedroom in order. Learning happens not only in books but also in the kitchen, the yard and the bathroom. A smart student is also a student who can take care of a warm little home.
