阅读理解（记叙文） The New Classmate from the Grasslands

① On a cold Monday morning in October, our head teacher Ms. Huang opened the classroom door and walked in with a tall boy. He stood beside her quietly, holding a small blue bag with a sheep picture on it. "Class," she said, "this is Batu. His family just moved from Inner Mongolia. Please be friendly." We said hello, but Batu only gave a small nod. He sat down alone at the empty desk beside the window.

③ The next day in PE class, our teacher said, "Today we run 1,000 metres." Most of us moaned, but Batu's eyes lit up. When the whistle blew, he flew out like a small horse. Halfway, he was already fifty metres ahead of everyone else. At the finish line, he was not even out of breath. Suddenly, no one was laughing any more; we were all asking, "How can you run so fast?"

⑥ Now Batu is our class champion in every running race. But what I remember best is not his running. It is the moment I stopped watching him from my seat and walked to his desk. Ms. Huang later told us, "Being kind is not hard. Sometimes it is just taking three steps to say hello." Three small steps, I learned, can carry a friendship from the grasslands all the way to our classroom.
