阅读理解（记叙文） Grandma's Old Songbook

① Last winter, when we helped Grandma move from her old apartment into a smaller one, I found a thin yellow book under her bed. The cover said "Mountain Songs of Our Village, 1968" in old-style Chinese writing. Inside, I found some English words written in pencil beside the Chinese: "birds", "river", "first light". I could not understand why my grandma, who never went to high school, had written English words in a folk songbook from her youth.

② When I asked her about it, she laughed for a long time. "Oh, that old thing," she said. "A young English teacher, Mr. Bennett, lived in our village for two summers when I was sixteen. He wanted to learn Chinese folk songs, so I sang, and he wrote down the tunes. In return, he taught me the English names of small things in the songs." Then Grandma's eyes turned soft. "I only had ten lessons," she said, "but for a country girl in 1968, those were ten bright windows."

⑤ An hour later, my aunt in Canada replied: "I was crying in the coffee shop!" My uncle in Xi'an said, "I haven't heard this song for forty years." Grandma, who was sitting beside me, could not really understand what a "file" was, but she could see her children's words on the screen. She put her hand on mine and said only one sentence: "The song is not old if you keep singing it."

⑥ The little yellow book is now on my desk, beside my textbooks. When my English homework feels hard, I open it and see those pencil notes — "birds", "river", "first light". I think of Mr. Bennett and my young grandma sitting by a stone bridge in 1968, two strangers using a tune to build a bridge over their languages. Every time I learn a new English word, I feel I am carrying their small lamp a little farther.
